UrbanByNature is continuing capacity building in the South Eastern Europe region:

The second session of the UrbanByNature South Eastern Europe webinar series will focus on step 3 of the UbN methodology, which is about collaborating with local residents and stakeholders for joint goal setting and prioritisation of nature-based solutions that suit the local context. Participants also learn about setting basic and, if possible, also specific indicators that relate to their city's specific needs and resources.

Sean Bradley from Groundwork London will introduce digital co-creation tools developed under the CLEVER Cities project and reflect on trust building with local communities as a prerequisite for joint priority setting. Adding practical experience from the region, Barbara Goličnik from the Slovenian Urban Planning Institute will share Slovenian policy-making efforts, experience on behavioural observations & mapping for co-creating NBS in public spaces and lessons-learned on defining soft NBS indicators for end-users under the ConnectingNature project.
